It is well to reply that nature studies are the growth of the last century, since Berzelius, Cuvier and Liebig initiated the modern methods of enquiry, carried on by Faraday, Darwin and Dana. Remember also that rigid discipline in logic and dialectics makes clear and accurate thinkers, fitted to treat the current questions of society with discrimination, perspicuity and persuasion. If our grandfathers did not excel in what we are pleased to call literature, they were taught to follow a rule of the illustrious Goethe, to use words coinciding as closely as possible with what we feel, see, think, experience, imagine and reason. Such men were fitted to take part in the great Revolution of 1776, and in more recent wars; to-be influential in the formation of the Constitution of the United States, and in the administration of justice and order in every State of the Union; qualified likewise to lead in the organisation and development of academies of science and schools of learning, defenders of the faith, upholders of right conduct, advocates of civil service reform, promoters of literature and science; and in general, trained by such discipline as they here received in mathematics, logic, history, language, philosophy, and science, to be the leading men in every community where their homes were placed. Sic vos non vobis mellificatis apes.
