Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Industrial Arts in Our Elementary Schools Americans should be proud of our democratic claim that free education is provided in each public rural and urban school in the United States. However, our faith in this boast cannot carry much conviction, either with ourselves or with others, unless the elementary schools are seriously concerned with those human activities that contribute most in preparing for the many-sided demands which confront all intelligent consumers and worthy citizens. If our elementary industrial arts courses are to continue to occupy an important place in the program for elementary education, they must soon be subjected to the same general tests and judged by the same high standards that apply to the other elementary school subjects. The relative possibilities in the different plans for realizing common objectives also must be determined more scientifically than heretofore. These brief reports dealing with the various units of elementary industrial arts work and study, which were successfully organized and conducted by Miss Hunter and the several other teachers named in connection with their respective contributions, were collected for the 1921 Yearbook by the Industrial Arts Committee of the National Society for the study of Education. Since it did not prove expedient for the Society to publish Part III of its 1921 Yearbook, which was to have included these suggestive reports, it has been recommended and urged that this carefully planned and tried material on promising experiments for developing industrial courses and projects to meet the psychological This committee was composed of L. A. Herr, G.H. Hargitt and A.H. Edgerton, chairman. and social needs of elementary school pupils should be revised for publication as a handbook for teachers...
